Woman's RIGHTS AND MAN'S RIGHTS .- On Saturday night, one Mr. Jacques got drunk and dieg. proceeded to show his utter centempt for all such new-langled humbugs as "Woman's Rights," and his own peculiar and exalted ideas of "Man's Rights," by unmercifully beating and maltreating his wife and children, and disturbing the peace generally. Quite a forcible illustration.

But the "People's Rights should be cared for; and the gentleman ought to be ducked, ridden on a rail, tarred and feathered, and politely requested to bundle up his "duds" and make himself

MORE BORROWING .- The McDonough (III.) In lependent has copied the article contributed to this paper by . B. H. W.," entitled "A Triplet Table," without giving the credit. We have pondered long and well over the Bloomington's Republican's mysterious rhymes in that paper e' the 11th, but can't disver what the editor was driving at, or whot the intented to mean, and don't suppose he knows himself. The Eurial of Sir Abner Gilstrap, Editor of the Bloomington "Republican."

A PARODY ON "THE BURE'L OF SIR JOHN MOORE,"

Not a drum was heard, nor a f meral note, As his corse to the ramparts we hirried;
Not a soldier discharged his farewell shot.

Our the grave where our hero we buried.

—[Barisi of Shr John Moore.

Not a sound was heard, nor a funeral note, As his ca-case through town we hurried; In respect for the rascal we buries.

W- buried him darkly, at dead of night-The dirt with our pitchforks turning; By the moonbeams' grim and ghastly light, And our candles dimly burning

No useless coffin confined his breast, Nor in sheet nor in shirt we bound him; But he lay like an Editor taking his rest, With a Hannibal Journal around him.

Few and very sho t were the prayers we said, And we felt not a pang of sorrow; But we maded, as we gazed on the wretch now de-Oh! where saill he be to-marrant

The "Iron Horse" will snort o'er his head, And the notes of its whistle upbraid him; But no thing he'll care if they let him sleep on, In the grave where his nonsense bath laid him.

Slowly, but gladly we laid him down,
